

My piece was simply an impassioned plea to all psychologists and other 'mental health' professionals to boycott any roles that support psychocompulsion and workfare.

As some people won't have seen it, I will send a link to this Mental Health Resistance Network film on the subject, though - an elucidating half hour weekend watch!:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NF3vjwTrM3M>

This link to the three minute song, lyrics below, that I'd hoped would provide a break from all the talking and powerfully lead into the plenary session

Broke

Hannah Grace

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NDz5r4_rkDM

- Written by:
- Adam Stuart Argyle
- Luke Benjamin Potashnick
- Hannah Grace

Tell me how to be like you
Live my life as someone new Coz every day the same pain begins to feel okay
But every night I close my eyes and its there again!

When you're down on the floor / Cut to the bone / Keep on breaking when you're broke
When time never heals/ It just seems to make it worse,
Yeah its gotta make you wonder
How it's supposed to make you stronger

I know I gotta wait in line
For good things only come with time
But every day the same pain begins to feel okay
But every night I close my eyes and its there again!

When you're down on the floor / Cut to the bone / Keep on breaking when you're broke
When time never heals / It just seems to make it worse,
Yeah its gotta make you wonder
How it's supposed to make you stronger

When all you feel is cold
You don't know what you're feeling
When all you need is gone
There's nothing left but needing

Can't walk in the light / You're scared of the dark / Can't be who you were / Can't be who you are
No one wants to know you
Nobody knows

When you're down on the floor / Cut to the bone / Keep on breaking when you're broke
When time never heals / It just seems to make it worse,
Yeah its gotta make you wonder
How it's supposed to make you stronger

Yeah its gotta make you wonder
How it's supposed to make you stronger